Barbara Jafelice, resident of Mono for over 25 years, first became attracted to the area as an art student with many sketching trips to the Hockley Valley. She has had a long career in public affairs and worked within the private and government sectors explaining multi-lateral environmental programs. As a public affairs practitioner, she engaged stakeholders explaining organisational policies and views on a variety of public policy issues, assisted policy makers and legislators in amending or laying down better policy and legislation at all three levels of government. She currently Chairs the Town of Mono Heritage Advisory Committee and sits on the board of the town's Planning, Environment, & Natural Heritage Committee,

She feels we must give a voice to the community, work to remind elected officials that a single individual can bring about positive change that will preserve and protect our rural landscape and the environment. Jafelice, as a member of the Nottawasga Handweavers and Spinners Guild, is committed to the importance of sustainability. Sustainability has become a key priority within handweaving and spinning community and as such help reduce waste. Whilst there has been a move towards more sustainable practices, there is still some way to go to cultivate interest and encourage community involvement.
